

Recently, Kyle graduated from the University of Florida in May, and will be returning next year in the business masters program. He's a marketing intern at Gunster, a law firm in West Palm Beach, and he also works in the recruiting department for UF football. After school he wants to work in either marketing or football. He enjoys watching/playing sports (particularly football), he's a big car guy, and he loves being on the water.

One major challenge he's overcome is driving. When he was young, an optometrist told his parents he would never get to drive, but he was able to get my license when he turned 16 just like every other "normal" kid. That has always been his approach to every situation, whether it be school, social situations, sports, etc. he never wanted to be labeled growing up, and he feels it made him more independent and resilient.
